

Research Study on Foot Care

For People with Diabetes and Visual Impairment

If you have diabetes and visual impairment, you are invited to be a part of a research study about teaching foot care to people who have diabetes and cannot see well. Sixty people are needed for this study.

If you decide to be in the study, you will be asked to participate for about 8 months. During that time, you will be asked to attend classes about diabetes care in general, with special attention given to how to take care of your feet. You will also have your feet examined three times by podiatrists from the Ohio College of Podiatric Medicine. And you will be asked to be part of a group discussion about foot care. Your transportation will be provided to all study activities.
